MAGGIE RULLI

Correspondent, ABC News

Maggie Rulli is a London-based ABC News correspondent covering stories around the world. To date, her work has sent her to nearly 50 countries and six continents.

During the most recent papal conclave, she reported live from Saint Peter's Square the moment white smoke announced the first American pope.

She followed Team USA during their exciting run at the Women's World Cup in New Zealand and Australia, and she has covered multiple Olympics, including Paris 2024 and the unprecedented Winter Olympics in Beijing from inside the "COVID bubble."

During the pandemic, Rulli was on the front lines, covering the impact of COVID-19 and the global response. She reported from Japan during one of the first recorded outbreaks, from India during the country's deadly delta-variant outbreak and from European cities as they reopened to tourists for the first time.

She has covered historic natural disasters, including the worst fires in Australia's history and record-breaking flooding in Germany, as well as extensive reporting on the environment, including the impact of tourism on the Galápagos Islands, peat restoration in Scotland and seaweed farming on the Faroe Islands.

While closely covering the British royals, Rulli has reported from Westminster Abbey during the coronation of King Charles III, outside Balmoral the night Queen Elizabeth II passed away, the wedding of Prince Harry and Meghan Markle at Windsor Castle, and multiple royal tours in South Africa and Pakistan.

Prior to joining the London bureau, Rulli was based in New York, where she covered the aftermath of Hurricane Michael, the Parkland shooting and the 2025 California wildfires. Before that, she was based in Washington, D.C., where she covered the 2016 presidential debates and President Donald Trump's first inauguration.

Rulli was a Channel One News reporter before joining ABC News. She learned all aspects of production, often working as a one-woman band. She gained rare inside access to a nuclear missile underground bunker and conducted a one-on-one interview with then-first lady Michelle Obama.

Rulli graduated summa cum laude from Boston College. Wherever she lives, she promises to remain always and forever faithful to her hometown sports teams: the Boston College Eagles and the Red Sox.
