Sylvain Dos Santos

Co-Creator / Executive Producer

Sylvain Dos Santos is co-creator and executive producer of "Dragon Striker."

Dos Santos began his career as an advertising creative before shifting to writing and producing animated series. Always passionate about manga and Japanese anime, he created his first animated show, "The Basketeers," with NBA star Tony Parker in 2010. He served as showrunner, executive producer and co-director for two seasons. He is also the mind behind the collectible shonen "Marblegen," which he created and developed.

After launching his production company, La Chouette Co., with Mariam Hachmi, he went on to create and creatively lead the anime-inspired series "Droners" and "Imago."

Dos Santos developed, alongside Square Enix and Crunchyroll, an animated series based on the "Final Fantasy" universe. It will go into production in early 2026.

In addition to his creative work, Dos Santos also works for La Chouette Co. as an executive producer on several shows, including "Dreamland" and "Time Epic Leap."

Alongside Mariam Hachmi and Charles Lefebvre, Dos Santos has launched Chouette Studio, specializing in the production of high-quality 2D anime for international clients. They are currently working on confidential projects involving world-class franchises from Japan and the United States.
